

Highfield School Association

Is there a Parents' Association in the school?

Highfield School has a Parents' Association called the Highfield School Association (the H.S.A.) to which all parents automatically belong. However, it is also open to grandparents, residents in the local community or anyone who is interested in or can help the children of the school.

The Association exists to raise funds for extra-curricular activities, to forge links between the children, staff and parents and to encourage the children's education in any way it can.

The H.S.A. organises various events throughout the year for both the children and the parents and we like parents to support the Association in any way they feel able.

A Committee of parents runs the Association.

The AGM is held during the Autumn Term and this is when the new Committee and its officers are elected. If you are interested in becoming involved, a form is included in the handbook, which we would ask you to complete and return to school.
